DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Garrison House was torn down in the 1930's by Randel Brown. The only remains of the structure are the foundations stones. It was a log building constructed in the saddlenotch method. The house was two bays by two with a gable roof. In the east gable end was a chimney with a walk-in fireplace. The roof had wooden shingles that were nailed to pinned rafters. The entrance was in the west gable end. The most interesting feature of this building were the loopholes located two to a wall with wooden shutters on the inside with leather hinges.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Since the Nottingham area was settled by Quakers there is much doubt about the purpose and function of this building. If it was originally built for military needs it would be a unique structure and obviously against the traditional non-violent Quaker stance taken towards the Indian.

The building in later years served as a cobbler's shop in the 1850's.
